IRELAND'S GREAT VICTORY.

Home-Rule Bill Passes the House of Commons and Is Read in the Lords. LONDON, Sept. 1.- The House of mmons agreed this afternoon to suspend the 12 o'clock rule to-night in order that the third reading of the Home Rule bill night be concluded before adjournment FOR THE MOTION, 301; AGAINST, 267.

When the time arrived for the vote on the third reading of the Home Rule bill the House divided, and the result was; For the motion, 201; against, 267, Justin McCarthy, leader of the Anti-Parnellites, was the first speaker. He said that although the bill did not have the pedantic character of finality, which its opponents contended any Home Rule measure must have, it contained finality n principle. When Ireland should get her National Parliament it would include finality in the true sense of the term. Irishmen so accepted the measure as a final adjustment of their leading grievance against Great Britain. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN'S ATTACK. Joseph Chamberlain, leader of the

This bill will vanish, but the weakness of the Liberal party, its lack of independence and its treatment of vital interests of the country as mere incidents of the Newcastle programme will not be forgotten nor forgiven by the British democracy." Prolonged Unionist cheers followed this

peroration. BALFOUR'S SPEECH

Mr. Balfour, Conservative leader, said that the House had not discussed threeourths of the Home Rule bill either in ommittee or in the report stage. The ngth of the debate on the Reform act of 13.2 had been quoted to show that the discussion of the present bill had been exceedingly long. But the Reform bill involved only two principles—the substitution of genuine constituencies for rotten ones and the settlement of the franchise whereon the electorate should

The present bill was an absolute reersal of the constitution, it involved a hange of every fundamental principle of the constitution. What was the prospect of gain to Ireland? The Irish members of Parliament had indulged in much

"I think the financial, in connection with the land question, will be the first sreat problem to confront the new Ireland. I think that Ireland has the men who are capable of meeting the question. It is hard to say which men will rise to the leadership of the new Government. MUST BE FOUGHT OVER.
Joseph P. Ryan, Secretary of the Irish National Federation, said:
"It is rather early to say anything about what the new Ireland will do. While we are face to face with the fact that a great measure has been materially advanced, we are also face to face with the fact that the House of Lords will not pass the bill. A new general election will have to take place, in which the Liberal party must be successful before the bill can again be presented to the House of Lords." Taking it for granted that the condithe House of Lords.

"Taking it for granted that the condi-tions under which the new Government would start are such as the Home Rule bill makes for it, it would be natural to expect that the problems of self government laken up by the new gov-ernment in Ireland must naturally be attended with some little confusion. The best governments on early assumed as being nearly correct as possible.

"It is difficult to tell who the new leaders will be. It may be that in the reasonable and lawful desire for leadership possessed by members of the party their forces may be so nearly of equal strength that compremise candidates will have to be taken up. But whoever is leader, the loyalty and patriotism of the members will not permit Irish interests to suffer from the ambition of individuals. I doubt whether Mr. McCarthy will care to strive for the leadership. Justin McCarthy holds his place only as the acceptable candidate in ease of division of parties because he is not a partisan candidate. He is getting old, and his strength may not warrant his entering on the severe duties of forming the new government.

MEN OF ABILITY.

Thomas F. Meehan, editor of the Irish-American, said:

"The Home-Rule bill, the first installment of justice to Ireland, is not yet a law. It would be idle speculation to try to go into the details of what might take place when real authority is granted to Ireland.

"The leaders of the Irish Parliamentary party, whose patriotic self-sacrifice has wrought such a change in popular copinion in England during the just ten years, may safely be trusted to work out the minor necessities of the governmental structure when it has risen over the solid foundation they have laid, Men like Justin McCarthy, John Dillon, William O'Brien, Arthur O'Connor, Thomas Sexton, Timothy Healy, T. D. Sullivan, and secres of others have proved their capabilities time and again. They have proved their ability to fill any office that may be created in the exercise of the administrative duties of self-government that the change will call on their native land to take up. call on their native land to take up evarament, taken up by the new government in Irchand must naturally be attended with some little confusion. The best governments on earth under like dreumstances would naturally be attended by trouble in the start.

"But the long experience and diligent training that the members have had in the English House of Commons will enter a like them readily to put the new government into working order. The members of Parliament have necessarily been sudents of political economy in this long struggle for Irish autionomy, and will be well prepared to assume their duties as members of the new government.

"The land question caunot be touched by the new Irish Parliament, as there is a probationary term of xix years before goes to the Irish Parliament. By that time-the land question will have largely settled itself, and there will be little of it.

"I think that the first duties of the new government will be to examine closely into the industrial interests of Ireland. The financial question is one which can only be carried out under the provisions as now enacted in the Home Rule bill. Mr. Gladstone has promised those clauses, There is no doubt that this commission will modify any clauses that are injurious to Irish interests. battling for justice. What they want for themselves they will cheerfully accord to others. The element in Ireland opposed to Home Rule is contending not for justice, but for clars privileges. The Catholics of Ireland, while devoted to their religion, not only are most totheir religion, not only are most tother religion, not only are most tother towards those who differ from them, but generous in the extreme, Many of the men whom they have most honored, put into office, sent to Parliament, elected Mayors of cities, have been Protestants. The present Mayor of Dublin is a Protestant, yet three-quarters of the population of Dublin is Catholic. In the northeastern section of Clater, which is dominated by a Protestant majority, no Catholic was ever elected to any position—imperial, national or municipal.

"I suppose the land question will be one of the first questions to be met by the new Ireland. Ireland being essentially sericultural at present, this question is naturally a most important one. If it is not disposed of by the British Parliament soon it will come before the Irish Parliament.

"It is hard to say who the leaders will be, Justin McCarthy is getting old and I also think there will be some new men who will spring up as the occasion requires them."
